CHARACTER SKETCHES OF AN IRISH VILLAGE

"Father Tom."

(Written for the Intermountain Cath-It is an Irish village. It does not mater where, suffice it to say, it is in Ire-and, and every village there is like it, if we would only open our eyes and placed in the chapel. The following see, but unfortunately the most of us Sunday Father Tom made reference to keep them closed, and hence never see the seats, and hoped the people liked the grandeur, the beautiful simplicity, them. A famous statesman prided himself on his success in campaigning, when called upon to reach a man's vote through his family pride. On one of his tours he passed through a country town when he came suddenly upon a charming group—a comely woman with a bevy of little ones about her—in a garden. He stopped short, then advanced and leaned on the front gate.

"Madam," he said, in his most ingratiating way, "may I kiss these beautiful children?"

"Certainly, sir," the lady answered demurely.

"They are lovely darlings," said the "They are lovely darlings," said the gloved, and matty dressed, making the first that will one day be the future men of Ireland and will know not Father Tom, except in memory. And on the Sunday I see him seated on a chair on the altar after mass, driving home the truths of his loved religion in his éwn simple style to the people's hearts and puncturation. And reader, it is Friday evening, come for a short while and take your stand with me near Father Tom's hall door. The good old man is after his dinner. He is standing on the steps of the hall door and the large grey eyes are ablaze with delight. Why? There is a long line of poor there waiting for his reverence. He welcomes them with a sweet smile, he has a kind word and something for each of them. The young curate, fresh from Maynooth, neatly wife and a girl companying.
